

Climate change what everyone needs to know

2 hour
course

Our two-hour workshop “Climate change – what everyone needs to know” can be rolled out to all employees across an organisation. It has already been delivered to hundreds of staff across different sectors. This interactive online session quickly brings participants up to speed on the climate crisis by answering the fundamental questions: What is climate change? What’s causing it? How bad could it get? What can we do about it?

Participants will learn:

- The impacts of climate change so far – including long-term, incremental changes such as sea level rise, and the impact of extreme weather
- What’s causing climate change and why we’re certain about the causes
- What we need to do, according to the science, to address the problem
- What progress has been made to tackle climate change at the international and national level
- How bad it could get in the future – considering impacts at the global, national and local level (local being the client’s own area)
- The sources of the client’s emissions and what it’s doing to reduce them
- The sources of individual participants own carbon footprint – and what they can do to reduce it

Praise
for this

Excellent presenter – I hardly ever say that! – but she, Rachel, was really, really good, so clear, friendly, authoritative, engaging and I was overjoyed the training covered food and agriculture, this was money well spent on our part as I think it was just what was needed to inform and galvanise staff and councillors in a positive way.

– Councillor Caroline Ellis

I just wanted to say how great that climate change training was, Rachel was very engaging. I like how it was localised to SWT, a balanced level of detail – enough to get the message across, good pace and interactive. The content was also delivered very neutrally so great for people who are a bit sceptical! I've heard really positive feedback from others too.

– Julie-Ann Wyatt, Head of people and culture

It was great. Three Point Five incorporated small touches that made it relevant to our council, got them to use our town names, talk about our projects etc. which went down really well and localised the whole thing. They were very receptive to changes. We had some concerns as to how it might work though zoom, but it was very engaging with, polls, interaction, and small breakout tasks, we need not have worried. We have received really positive feedback from members (even the ones that are less supportive/ aware), and employees.

– Chris Hall, assistant director of climate change

I just wanted to thank you and Rachel for a brilliant training session yesterday afternoon. Rachel was so engaging and easy to listen to, very well executed. It opened up my eyes to the issues which you think as a single person you really make a difference but in fact you can.
